YANK FLIERS IN ENGLAND; GET WELCOME

Uneventful Trip across Channel Ended Near London at 2 P. M.

BULLETIN
Tokio, July 16.—A. Stuart MacLaren, British aviator flying around world, is six hours overdue at Paramashiru Island, Kuriles, where he was to have landed today and a Japanese destroyer has set out in search of his airplane, according to a report received here from Paramashiru late today.

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Croydon, England, July 16.—The American air men on their world flight landed here at 2:08 this afternoon.

The three machines taxied into the Croydon airfield at 2:08. Lieutenant Lowell H. Smith, flight commander, was the first to land. One of the first to greet the American was Mrs. Stuart MacLaren, wife of the British world flier, who asked news of her husband, now in the Far West.

"I am sorry we missed him, but am glad we could help him," Lieut. Smith replied to Mrs. MacLaren, referring to the new machinery with which the American expeditionary forces were able to supply the British aviator in India last month.

As the three planes swept up the field, the crowd burst into loud applause and hurried to clasp the hands of the aviators and have them write something in autograph albums, on the backs of envelopes or on anything else handy.

"We are all well and feeling fine," Lieut. Smith said.

LEFT FRANCE AT 11:05 A. M.
By Associated Press Leased Wire
Le Bourget, France, July 16.—The American army round-the-world fliers hopped off at 11:05 this morning for England.

A French commercial air liner accompanied the three United States airplanes to point out the way to the channel. They were followed by a French military escort of three planes.

The world fliers had fairly good weather for their farewell to France. The three American airplanes took off unostentatiously.

YOUNG MAY GET IMPORTANT POST IN REPARATIONS

American May be Asked to be Agent General Under Dawes Plan

London, July 16.—(By The Associated Press)—Owen D. Young, member of the Dawes committee of experts today declared that neither the position of agent-general of reparations or any other post under the Dawes plan has been offered him.

Mr. Young stated that he had received no intimation of any sort from the reparations commission or any other source that he would be asked to assist in the administration of a Dawes scheme.

It is generally assumed in British and American circles that if the London conference is successful and Dawes plan is put into effect Mr. Young will be asked to take one of the most important posts, probably that of chairman of the transfer committee, otherwise known as agent-general of reparations. The appointment would be made by the reparations commission, but officials consider it absurd to assert that such an appointment has been made before its deliberation. It had been reported that Mr. Young had already accepted an offer of a position.

NO LIVES LOST IN FOREST FIRE LATE REPORTS INDICATE

Rain in Westetrn Washington Aids Fighters in That Sector

By Associated Press Leased Wire
San Francisco, July 16.—Eastern Washington, northern Idaho and California today continued their more or less successful battles against forest fires, but rains in western Washington and Oregon had nearly ended the fire menace there.

Fires in northern Idaho and northern Washington last night had burned over several thousand acres of timber land and had destroyed the surface workings of four mines, a number of ranch houses and much property of lumber companies. So far as known no lives have been lost, although a number of persons have been injured and some live stock killed. Four persons are missing in British Columbia.

Flames Near Seven Towns
Flames were close enough to seven towns in the Pend Oreille silver valley to cause anxiety to the inhabitants. In some places ranches had loaded their belongings on railroad cars in preparation for a quick getaway.

In the Santa Barbara National Forest in California last night fire fighters crews throttled the western advance of the flames to a comparatively narrow front, only to receive word that a fresh outbreak had been discovered at Oak Grove, a mile north of the main fire line.

A new fire in the Angeles National Forest, also in California, in the San Gabriel Range, between Mount Lowe and Mount Wilson, burned over 30 acres, but was controlled last night.

A soaking rain late yesterday, following showers on Monday, virtually extinguished all small fires in western Washington.

Rains in Oregon, Monday, enabled the fighters to get control of all fires.

Crocker's Children Lost Another Step in Battle
By Associated Press Leased Wire
West Palm Beach, Fla., July 16.—Three children of Richard Crocker, former Tammany chieftain, lost another step in their contest of his will when County Judge R. P. Robbins admitted to probate here yesterday the will made October 12, 1919, at Glen Cairn, his estate in Dublin, Ireland, bequeathing to his widow, Mrs. Bula E. Crocker, his estate valued at $10,000,000.

Accepted to the last will and testament of the late political boss, it revokes all other such documents. The three children, Richard, Jr., Howard Ethel, who have prosecuted a long court fight to overturn the will on grounds that Mrs. Crocker, his second wife, exerted an undue influence over her husband in his later years and other charges, announced through their attorney that they would appeal the decision.

Attached to the will was a codicil written by Crocker on November 15 of the same year in wife requesting that she give his daughter, Florence, ten thousand pounds sterling, because "she is the only one of my surviving children that has ever shown any gratitude to me."

Don't Have to Notify LaFollette He's Running
By Associated Press Leased Wire
Washington, July 16.—Senator LaFollette of Wisconsin, probably won't be notified officially that the recent Cleveland convention of the conference for progressive political action endorsed him as an independent candidate for president.

He knows he is a candidate—in fact he knew it before the convention did. So he has concluded it would be a waste of time, money and energy to have a formal notification ceremony.

When the conference's national committee meets here last of the week to work out campaign plans, it intends to call on the senator. That's the nearest approach to a notification.

Several weeks may elapse before the LaFollette campaign is in full swing. A mass of details remain to be worked out and the senator has concluded it would be best to attend to them first, conserving his strength for strenuous days later in the fight when he figures, arguments will have more telling effect on voters.

LIQUOR CASES WILL BE TAKEN TO HIGH COURT

Conviction in Local Court to be Appealed to Springfield

A jury in the county court late yesterday afternoon returned a verdict in which they found Paul Serig, who resides east of Dixon, guilty on five counts contained on an information. The jury deliberated a very short time before arriving at the verdict which found the defendant guilty of manufacturing intoxicating liquor, possessing intoxicating liquor, possessing a still, operating a still and maintaining a still.

This morning another jury was selected to hear testimony in the case against Ben Smudka of this city, against whom information was filed in the county court charging him with possessing intoxicating liquor. Smudka's residence at the corner of East Second street and Noble avenue was raided by sheriff's forces and members of the police department on June 23.

In the county court today it was intimated that at least two liquor cases of recent trial would be carried to the supreme court, those of Constantin Gredinar, alias "Black Joe" and the Paul Serig cases.

New Device Eliminates Listening in on Radio
By Associated Press Leased Wire
New York, July 16.—A device to eliminate "listening in" or interference in radio transmission was described today by John Hays Hammond Jr., who returned yesterday from Italy.

Complete isolation of sender and receiver is afforded by method of sending out rays which have curves and dens in them, according to Mr. Hammond. Only the receiver who is familiar with the wave type can read the message.

The new method of transmission will also make it possible to flash complete pages of print across the Atlantic ocean by radio, Mr. Hammond predicts.

Revise Freight Rates on Grain and Products
Washington, July 16.—Proposed readjustments of rates on grain and grain products from southeastern Missouri points to Memphis, New Orleans and other Mississippi points and between points in southeastern Missouri and St. Louis, Cairo, Illinois and related points today were found justified by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

New schedules which previously had been ordered suspended were cancelled by the commission, however, and another revision will be worked out later.

Charge Santa Carried Gun and Stole Jewels
Word came from Moline, Ill., last night that James Burns, held in connection with a liquor deal, is wanted in that town for playing Santa Claus with reverse English.

Moline authorities claim that Burns, clad in the costume of the Christmas saint, entered the Cox Jewel company's shop on the evening of Dec. 21. After warming his hands and eating some lunch, Santa drew a gun and forced the clerks into a back room.

Then he helped himself to $23,500 worth of diamonds and vanished without the assistance of reindeer.

Promise Was No Good.

He is to be arraigned before the justice this afternoon on a charge of disturbing the peace.

WHEELER, DEMOCRATIC PROSECUTOR OF DAUGHERTY, IS BACKING BOB LAFOLLETTE

Says He Can't Give His Support to John W. Davis

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Washington, July 16.—Senator Burton W. Wheeler on Montana, democratic prosecutor of the Daugherty investigating committee, said today he probably would support Robert M. LaFollette in this year's presidential campaign.

Asked whether he would accept a nomination for vice president on the LaFollette ticket, for which he has been widely mentioned, Mr. Wheeler replied that he would not.

"I do not see how I can support John W. Davis," said Senator Wheeler. "In view of my past position I could not ask the people of my state to vote for Mr. Morgan's personal attorney."

The Montana senator added that he was not "quitting the democratic party" but merely was unable to convince himself that he could consistently support the nominee chosen at the New York convention.

He would not commit himself definitely regarding his support of the LaFollette ticket but when he was asked directly whether he would do so, he replied that such a course was "probable."

FURTHER PROBE OF FATAL BLAST UP TO SECRETARY

Wilbur and Technical Staff to Decide on Next Procedure

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Washington, July 16.—Secretary Wilbur and his technical staff will determine whether further investigation is to be made to fix responsibility for failure to comply with regulations, to which, in part, a naval court of inquiry has attributed the loss of 48 lives in the turret explosion, June 12, aboard the battleship Mississippi.

The accident is described by the court of inquiry as one of a series of three explosions in the turret during firing practice off the California coast. The first resulted in no damage, the second caused the heavy loss of life and the third, four hours later, added ten to the number of injured.

The court, which made no recommendations in its report, expresses the opinion that the number of casualties in the main explosion "was increased by the presence of unofficial observers who crowded the turret and center gun more difficult; age ways making exit more difficult; that the damage done by the turret on the left and center guns probably resulted from the failure to keep the safety doors over the shell table closed" and that "the fire in the upper handling room was caused by the safety doors not being entirely closed."

DRUG ADDICTS THOUGHT TO BE ROBBERS HERE

"Dope" Sections Prescription Departments Ransacked

Three Dixon drug stores were entered and robbed during the night, the thefts not being discovered until the places of business were opened this morning about 7:30. The work has the appearance of the operation of drug addicts, according to the police, as the stocks were undisturbed and there appears to have been but very few articles taken.

In the Public Drug & Book Co.'s store about $10 in money was taken from the cash drawer and at the Campbell's White Cross drug store about $3 in small change is missing. At the Sterling Pharmacy no money was taken. The stock of drug in the prescription departments were ransacked to some extent. Entrance was effected by breaking in windows, police doors and jimmying doors. The police this morning recovered a heavy screw driver in one of the stores which had been used as a jimmy in effecting entrance.

LOEB'S BROTHER WAS CONSIDERED AS THEIR VICTIM

Attorney Darrow Says Families Fear for Their Own Lives

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Chicago, Ill., July 16.—Nathan Leopold, Jr. and Richard Loeb, awaiting trial August 4, on charges of kidnapping and slaying 13-year-old Robert Frank, at one time considered Ernest Loeb, 11, brother of Richard, as the victim of their search for a thrill, according to defense attorneys.

"For this reason, there is no one who wants to see the boy's freed," Clarence E. Darrow, chief of counsel for the defense said. "The family and lawyers are actually afraid of the boys."

The theory of the defense, it was indicated after numerous examinations by alienists and experts had killing of the Franks boy was in response to an irresistible mandate of two coincidentally insane impulses.

COUNCIL HEARS PLEA OF GYROS FOR NEW CAMP

Commissioners Indicate Favorable Reception to Suggestion

Dixon's need for a modern camp ground for tourists equipped with lights, water and some conveniences, was placed before the members of the city council last evening by Arthur Schuck, a member of the recently organized Gyro club. The representative of the club explained that while there was a piece of ground lying outside the city limits that might be used for campers and tourists, it is not equipped with modern conveniences and is noticeably lacking in popularity among tourists.

"Dixon was one of the first cities in Illinois to have a tourist camp," he said, "and now we have practically nothing to offer in the way of accommodations." "In the first place the ground is out of the city, there are no lights and conveniences such as are to be found in other cities and the camp is not under city supervision. There are sites that are available in the city limits which would make wonderful camps. One of these lies along the east side of the Illinois Central tracks, one 1/2 mile north side. An entrance could be built from the Lincoln Highway into these grounds and gradually they could be turned from an eye sore and dumping ground into a modern and beautiful tourist camp."

Tourists Want Conveniences.
Mr. Schuck stated that he had conducted an investigation into the matter and had learned that tourists generally favored paying a reasonable fee for the privilege of a modern camp ground and that by adopting this system, the undesirable "tramp" element would be eliminated. A good camp ground with modern conveniences would be one of the best advertisements that Dixon could have and one that would be known from coast to coast and such a camp could be made self sustaining, the speaker told the council.

Mayor Palmer spoke favorably of the proposition and added that another site very suitable was situated in the east end of the city where the Chicago Road and the Lincoln Highway meet. The only objection to this site was the lack of shade trees. Commissioner Slothover explained that the city could not appropriate funds toward this end and added that he had seen from one to a dozen cars parked in the present tourist camp. Mr. Schuck replied that instead of ten or a dozen, Dixon, as it is situated, should have a hundred or more tourists availing themselves of a modern camp ground. He also called the attention of the council to the present driveway leading south from the Lincoln Highway into the athletic field and spoke in favor of clearing up the unsightly dumping ground which greets the eyes of the tourist and opening the road into the field. The council favored the proposition as presented.

Paid Semi-Monthly Bills.
The regular list of semi-monthly bills were presented and ordered paid. The application of Joe E. Miller, 218 East First street, to erect a curb gas-oil pump was tabled until the next meeting.

Local Improvement ordinance, No. 214, series of 1924, covering the construction of the west end sewer system was passed.

The application of C. A. Smith, 707 Depot avenue for a permit to sell soft drinks was granted by the council.

An ordinance closing the north side of Commercial alley between Peoria and Hennepin avenues to the parking of cars or vehicles between the hours of 6 and 12 o'clock on Saturday nights was passed.

The board of local improvements voted unanimously to advertise for bids on the Peoria avenue paving project.

ALLIED CONFERENCE TO PUT DAWES' PLAN IN EFFECT IS OPEN

Ambassador Kellogg is Observer for the United States Government

London, July 16.—(By the Associated Press.) The inter-allied conference for the purpose of making effective the Dawes plan for German reparations assembled at 11 o'clock today at the foreign office, American Ambassador Kellogg and Colonel James A. Logan, Jr., the American observer with the reparation commission, were present with four advisers.

Formally welcoming the delegates to the conference, Prime Minister MacDonald made a special reference to the presence of the Americans. He noted they were not present as full delegates but he took their presence as indicating the good will and co-operation of the United States in the effort to make the Dawes plan effective.

Ambassador Kellogg, replying to Mr. MacDonald's welcome, said the American government and people believed the adoption of the Dawes report would be the first great step toward stabilization of Europe.

Urged No Change Be Made.

Premier MacDonald briefly surveyed the reparation problem, urging the importance of putting the Dawes report into effect as a whole, without change of details.

It would be the business of the conference, said Mr. MacDonald, to create conditions for the working of the Dawes report, the first being the financial and economic unity of Germany and the second, adequate security for prospective investors in the loan for Germany.

One great merit of the experts' work continued the premier, was the businesslike methods they had adopted in preparing it and he hoped the present conference would follow their example.

Macdonald is Chairman.

Responding to the British prime minister's welcome, Premier Herriot of France thanked his colleague for his "noble words." He recognized the apparent difficulties before the conference, but he thought everybody was "imbued alike with love of country and love of peace." Therefore he believed the interests of the various peoples concerned could be reconciled.

M. Herriot proposed Premier MacDonald as chairman of the conference, after which the business of organization was begun. Sir Maurice Hankey was named secretary-general and three committees were appointed to work out the agenda along the lines of the Herriot-Macdonald communique issued from Paris, July 9.

The conference adjourned until tomorrow.

COMMISSION IS BUSY.

Paris, July 16.—(By the Associated Press.) The reparation commission devoted all of today and a good part of the night to the request made in the joint MacDonald-Herriot note of last week that it submit to the League of Nations a plan for the execution of inter-allied conference suggestions with a view of establishing a plan whereby the economic and fiscal unity of Germany should be re-established as soon as the commission had decided that the Dawes report was in force.

The reparation body began by dividing the problem into two parts, discussing first the feasibility of a plan providing for the transition from the present economic organization in the occupied regions to the organization provided in the Dawes report. The commission, however, came to no agreement, deciding instead to ask the allied governments to supply it with supplementary explanations. It also passed the next part of the problem, namely: To define when the Dawes plan might be considered to be put into execution.

Sheriff Gets Alcohol

Runner East of City

Sheriff Elliott C. Risley and a force of deputies at 1:30, Wednesday afternoon stopped a liquor runner on the Lincoln Highway just as he entered the east city limits and escorted him to the county jail, where an investigation yielded 25 gallons of grain alcohol in cans. The driver of the car gave the name of James Sorenson of Thompson, Ill., an automobile dealer. He was accompanied by Mrs. Glen Sears also of Thompson.

Mrs. Sears drove the car, an Olds roadster, until they were about to enter the city when Sorenson took the wheel. At the county jail, investigation showed a cargo of about $500 worth of alcohol. Both parties are being held. The license number carried on the car was issued to Sorenson for a Dodge car.

WIRE TAPPING IN BIG OFFICE BROKER'S CHARGE

Wall Street Plunger is Author of Accusation Made This Morn

By Associated Press Leased Wire
New York, July 16.—Charges that private wires leading from his office in Fifth avenue to the offices of several brokers have been tapped lately were made by Jesse L. Livermore, famous plunger of Wall Street, in an interview appearing today in which he denied rumors that he had suffered heavy losses recently in his speculations.

As a result of the wire tapping, much information of a valuable and confidential nature has been obtained by persons for whom it was not intended, he asserted. He said the rumors that he had suffered heavy losses were "laughable."

"The report that I have suffered losses, particularly in American Can stock," he said, "is obviously due to certain interests that are trying to manipulate that stock. I have not lost a dollar in American Can."

"I have been active in the stock market for two weeks. It is nothing but a professionally controlled market. Why should I bother with it when grain is moving through a range of from ten to fifteen cents a week."

"The stock market is controlled by cliques. There is no public interest. On the other hand, the grain market is at present a world-wide affair. It is so big that no man and no group of men can control it or have any influence upon it."

Founder of Piggly-Wiggly Wins Suits

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Columbus, O., July 16.—The United States Circuit Court of Appeals today modified the injunction suit against Clarence Saunders, founder of the Piggly Wiggly chain stores corporation and held that Saunders may make use of any improvements of patents or systems not included in the organization of the Piggly Wiggly corporation.

The court's decision announced by Judge Maurice H. Donohue of Cincinnati, declared there is no express provision in the contracts signed by Saunders and the Piggly Wiggly corporation which "prohibit" Saunders from engaging in the retail grocery business or from operating self-service stores with instrumentalities in common use in self-service stores other than the Piggly Wiggly stores when these contracts were executed or with any improvements therein that do not infringe the Piggly Wiggly methods.

No modification was made in the district court's order relative to the use of Saunders' name in connection with any similar enterprise which he may undertake.

Amboy Man is Fined.

Arthur Hanson of Amboy, arrested last Sunday afternoon by Deputy Sheriff Fred Washburn for driving an automobile while in an intoxicated condition, was fined $50 and costs by Justice J. O. Shaulis this morning.

TWO MANAGERS OF DEM. CAMPAIGN IS CANDIDATE'S WISH

Division of Work Plan of Davis and His Close Advisers

By Associated Press Leased Wire
New York, July 16.—John W. Davis, democratic national nominee, will select today his campaign manager and the new chairman of the democratic national committee.

This announcement was made today by George White, former national chairman, who with Clem Shaver of West Virginia, spent the morning with Mr. Davis.

Mr. Davis announced today that in order to give his entire undivided attention to the campaign he had determined to sever all of his legal and business connections. His law partners were notified accordingly of his withdrawal from the firm of Stetson, Jennings, Russell & Davis.

Among other employments surrendered by Mr. Davis was that of general counsel for The Associated Press. He also resigned the only directorship held by him, namely in the United States Rubber Company, the Atchafalaya, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company and the National Bank of Commerce of New York.

Close friends of Mr. Davis maintained that as yet the candidate had offered the posts of campaign manager and national chairman to no one, although it was said his decision would be made shortly.

HOUSEHOLD SUGGESTIONS—

Use a Fork.
Sponge cakes and angel foods should be pulled apart with a fork rather than cut with a knife.

Jelly Rolls.
To roll a jelly roll without cracking it, turn it out of the baking tin on a cloth wrung out of cold water. As you spread with jelly the steam from the wet cloth will prevent the cracking and will help you to do a neat job.

Soak in Borax.
Remove stains made by chocolate or cocoa by soaking in cold strong borax water for a while and then pouring water through in the usual manner.

Use a Brush.
Corn silk may be removed from ears of corn more quickly with a whisk broom or a vegetable brush than by hand.

Bleaching Cottons.
Javelle water is useful for bleaching cottons and linens, but it turns silks and wools quite yellow.

Cleaning Chandeliers.
Sponge brass chandeliers with a hot vinegar and salt, rinse with soap-suds and polish with flannel or chambray moistened with a few drops of machine oil.

Good For Salads.
Celery tops may be utilized for garnishing salads or cold meats.

Home-Made Glue.
A good glue for sticking labels on to glass or tin is made by mixing one part of powdered gum arabic with one of starch and four of sugar.

To Set Colors.
To set the green in cotton fabrics use four ounces of alum to a tubful of water.

THREE-PIECE OUTFIT

This very effective three-piece outfit copies the most attractive features of the peasant costume and combines them with the best lines of Paris.

The gown is a simple straightline affair with a low waistline and a pleated skirt. The long coat is much more elaborate. The pleats are held in at the waistline and hemline by bands of embroidery which keep the lines very straight. The embroidery is repeated on the shoulders, applied peasant style.

A collar of white rabbit fur softens the neckline and adds the bit of protection that even a summer coat should afford. The material is white crepe de chine and the embroidery is in shades of blue and orange.

eliminate much of the criticism of public officials, might indeed give us officials with such high purpose; could well give us congresses that would not separate into blocs to promote party or personal prejudices, and would not scour jails and penitentiaries for evidence to bolster their ends.

But there can be no really "high purpose to serve the nation" manifest among citizens who do not vote at every election, unless now and then some really important and insurmountable circumstance presents itself. President Coolidge has called attention to both the duty and importance of voting, in a most forceful way, and to the "curious assumption of superiority on the part of a good many of those who do not vote." Read again these words of his:

"Every voter ought not merely to vote, but to vote under the inspiration of a high purpose to serve the nation. It has been calculated that in most elections only about half of those entitled to vote actually exercise their franchise. What is worse, a considerable part of those who neglect to vote do it because of a curious assumption of superiority to this elementary duty of the citizen.
They presume to be rather too good, too exclusive, to soil their hands with the work of politics. Such an attitude can not too vigorously be condemned."

BUILDING AGAINST RATS.

Citizens of Astoria, Ore., are convinced that a city can be rat-proof and that construction leading to that condition is most desirable. The destruction of part of the city by fire made it possible to rebuild certain sections from the ground up and according to the most modern rat-proof methods.

Concrete retaining walls, concrete basements in new buildings, tunnels which carry all wires and pipes from street to buildings, concrete walls completely enclosing sewers, and storm sewer entrances so screened that rat can not possibly get in or out, all help to hinder the progress of even the most enterprising rat from one place to another.

Deprived thus of hiding places, residences and facilities for entering buildings, the rats will die off from hunger and ennui or move to other and less concretely constructed cities.

It is only in recent years that people have realized that building against rats is as important as fighting them with poisons after they have infested a community. Rats have always done a great deal of damage—carrying diseases, causing fires, destroying food and injuring buildings—and will continue to work mischief as long as human beings permit.

100 PERCENT AMERICANISM?

It's an easy boast to claim that one is 100 percent American. But can the reader claim honestly that he has attained 100 percent Americanism? Let's put the test to ourselves.

What better test can be put than that that being put to all American Legion members?
Legion members are asked to figure out their percentage as Americans on the basis of the answers they can make to the following questions:

Did I vote at every election last year? A conscientious yes means 20 percent Americanism.

Have I listed all my income or property?
If yes add 20 percent more.

Do I obey all the laws or only those that do not bother me? Add another 20 percent if that one doesn't feaze you.

Do I evade jury duty and do I stand up to the rack as a witness? How does that one make you feel? If you pass it and the preceding ones add 10 percent, and that will score 70 percent for you. Then there are three others, each scoring 10 percent for or against you.

Have I commended efficient public officials?

Have I urged on delinquent officials the performance of duty?

Am I aggressive in the support of worthy movements?

The Legionnaire who successfully passes this self-examination is surely entitled to praise. How about the rest of us?

ABIE.

"Abie's Irish Rose" begins a third year of its continuous run in New York. In the entire history of the stage there is nothing like its success. Already it is said to have earned two million dollars for its writer, Anne Nichols. Experts in the show business say she will get additional five millions in next ten years.

Every producer in New York is said to have turned down Abie when its author peddled it.
She produced it herself on credit and a capital of $34. Every critic panned it. Look at it now. If you have a good thing, and are sure, plug along regardless.

But if it weren't for an occasional moving day

Then the swapping might result in standardization of furniture.

And the richer he got, the nicer he

CHAPTER I

THE HUCKSTER

SIR OLIVER TRESSILLIAN sat at his ease in the lofty dining-room of the handsome house of Penarrow, which he owed to the enterprise of his father of lamented and lamentable memory and to the skill and invention of an Italian engineer named Bagnolo who had come to England half a century ago as one of the assistants of the famous Torrigiani.

This house deserves, together with the story of its construction, a word in passing.

The Italian Bagnolo had the mischance to kill a man in a brawl in a Southwark tavern. As a result he fled the town, nor paused in his headlong flight from the consequences of that murderous deed until he had all but reached the very ends of England. To the fugitive, Ralph afforded shelter; and Bagnolo repaid the service by offering to rebuild the decaying half-timbered house of Penarrow. Having taken the task in hand he went about it with all the enthusiasm of your true artist, and achieved for his protector a residence that was a marvel of grace in that crude age and outlandish district.

The main doorway was set in a projecting wing and was overhung by a massive balcony, the whole surmounted by a pillared pediment of extraordinary grace, now partly clad in a green mantle of creepers. Above the burnt red tiles of the roof soared massive twisted chimneys in lofty majesty.

But the glory of Penarrow was the garden fashioned out of the tangled wilderness about the old house that had crowned the heights above Penarrow point. Time and Nature had smoothed the lawns to a velvet surface, had thickened the handsome boxwood hedges, and thrust up those black spear-like poplars that completed the very Italian appearance of that Cornish demesne.

Sir Oliver took his ease in his dining-room considering all this as it was displayed before him in the mellowing September sunshine, and found it all very good to see, and life very good to live. Now no man has ever been known so to find life without some immediate cause, other than that of his environment, for his optimism. Sir Oliver had several causes. The first of these—although it was one which he may have been far from suspecting—was his equipment of youth, wealth, and good digestion; the second was that he had achieved honor and renown both upon the Spanish Main and in the late harrying of the invincible Armada and that he had received in that the twenty-fifth year of his life the honor of knighthood from the Virgin Queen; the third and last contributor to his pleasant mood was Dan Cupid who had so contrived matters that Sir Oliver's wooing of Mistress Rosamund Godolphin ran an entirely smooth and happy course.

So, then, Sir Oliver sat at his ease in his tall, carved chair, his doublet untrussed, his long legs stretched before him, a pensive smile about the firm lips that as yet were darkened by no more than a small black line of mustachios. It was noon, and our gentleman had just dined, and the platters, the broken meats and the half-empty flagon on the board beside him testified. He pulled thoughtfully at a long pipe—for he had acquired this newly-imported habit of tobacco-drinking—and dreamed of his mistress, and was properly and gallantly grateful that fortune had used him so handsomely as to enable him to toss a title and some measure of renown into his Rosamund's lap.

By nature Sir Oliver was a shrewd fellow and he was also a man of some not inconsiderable learning. Yet neither his natural wit nor his acquired endowments appear to have taught him that of all the gods that rule the destinies of mankind there is none more ironic and malicious than that same Dan Cupid. The ancients knew that innocent-seeming boy for a cruel, treacherous knave, and they mistrusted him. Sir Oliver either did not know or did not heed that sound piece of ancient wisdom. It was to be borne in upon him by grim experience, and even as his light pensive eyes smiled upon the sunshine that flooded the terrace beyond the long unblinded window, a shadow fell athwart it, which he little dreamed to be symbolic of the shadow that was even falling across the sunshine of his life.

After that shadow came the substance—tall and gay of raiment under a broad black Spanish hat docketed with blood-red plumes.

The smile perished on Sir Oliver's lips. His swarthy face grew thoughtful, his black brows contracted until no more than a single deep furrow stood between them. Then slowly the smile came forth again, but no longer that erstwhile gentle pensive smile. It was transformed into a smile of resolve and determination, a smile that tightened his lips even as his brows relaxed.

Came Nicholas his servant to announce Master Peter Godolphin, and close upon the lackey's heels came Master Godolphin himself, leaning upon his beribboned cane and carrying his broad Spanish hat. He was a tall, slender gentleman, with a shaven, handsome countenance, stamped with an air of haughtiness; like Sir Oliver, he had a high-bridged, intrepid nose, and in age he was the younger by some two or three years. He wore his auburn hair rather longer than was the mode just then, but in his that Rosamund is but seventeen and that she is under my guardianship and that of Sir John Killigrew. Neither Sir John nor I can sanction this betrothal."

"Good lack!" broke out Sir Oliver. "Who asks your sanction or Sir John's? By God's grace your sister will grow to be a woman soon and mistress of herself. I am in no desperate haste to get me wed, and by nature—as you may be observing—I am a wondrous patient man. I'll even wait."

And he pulled at his pipe. "Waiting can not avail you in this, Sir Oliver. 'Tis best you should understand. We are resolved, Sir John and I."

"Are you so? God's light! Send Sir John to me to tell me of his resolves, and I'll tell him some thing of mine. Tell him from me."

"He leaned across the board, raised his long cane and struck Sir Oliver sharply on the shoulder."

apparel there was no more foppishness than is tolerable in a gentleman of his years.

Sir Oliver rose and bowed from his great height in welcome. But a wave of tobacco-smoke took his graceful visitor in the throat and set him coughing and grimacing.

"I see," he choked, "that ye have acquired that filthy habit."

"I have known filthier," said Sir Oliver composedly.

"If nothing doubt it," rejoined Master Godolphin, thus early giving indications of his humor and the object of his visit.

Sir Oliver checked an answer that must have helped his visitor to his ends, which was no part of the knight's intent.

"Therefore," he said ironically, "I hope you will be patient with my shortcomings. Nick, a chair for Master Godolphin and another cup. I bid you welcome to Penarrow."

A sneer flickered over the younger man's face.

"You pay me a compliment, sir, which I fear me 'tis not wise to return to you."

"Time enough for that when I come to seek it," said Sir Oliver with easy, if assumed, good humor.

"When you come to seek it?"

"The hospitality of your house," Sir Oliver explained.

"It is on that very matter I am come to talk with you."

"Will you sit?" Sir Oliver invited him, and spread a hand toward the chair which Nicholas had set.

In the same gesture he waved the servant away.

Master Godolphin ignored the invitation.

"You were," he said, "at Godolphin Court but yesterday, I hear."

He paused, and as Sir Oliver offered no denial, he added stiffly—"I am come, sir, to inform you that the honor of your visits is one we shall be happy to forego."

In the effort he made to preserve his self-control before so direct an affront Sir Oliver paled a little under his tan.

"You will understand, Peter," he replied slowly, "that you have said too much unless you add something more."

He paused, considering his visitor a moment.

"I do not know whether Rosamund has told you that yesterday she did me the honor to consent to become my wife."

"She is a child that does not know her mind," broke in the other.

"Do you know of any good reason why she should come to change it?" asked Sir Oliver with a slight air of challenge.

Master Godolphin sat down, crossed his legs and placed his hat on his knee.

"I know a dozen," he answered. "But I need not urge them. Sufficient should it be to remind you that done, he strode off magnificently toward the door. Half-way thither he paused.

"I shall expect your friends and the length of your sword," said he.

Sir Oliver laughed again. "I don't think I shall trouble to send them," said he.

Master Godolphin wheeled, fully to face him again.

"How? Will you take a blo?"

Sir Oliver shrugged. "None saw it given," said he. "But I shall publish it abroad that I have ceded you."

"You'll publish yourself a liar if you do; for none will believe you."

Then he changed his tone yet again.

"Come, Peter, we are behaving unworthily. As for the blow, I confess that I deserved it. A man's mother is more sacred than his father. So we may cry quits on all else? What can it profit us to perpetrate a foolish quarrel that sprang up between our fathers?"

"There is more than that between us," answered Master Godolphin. "I'll not have my sister wed a pirate."

"A pirate? God's light! I am glad there's none to hear you, for since her Grace has knighted me for my doings upon the seas, your words go very near to treason. Surely, lad, what the queen approve Master Peter Godolphin may approve, and even your mentor, Sir John Killigrew. You've been listening to him. 'Twas he sent you hither."

"I am no man's lackey," answered the other hotly, resenting the imputation and resenting it the more because of the truth in it.

"To call me a pirate is to say a foolish thing. Hawkins, with whom I sailed, has also received the accolade, and who dubs us pirates insults the queen herself. Apart from that, which, as you see, is a very empty charge, what else have you against me? I am, I hope, as good as any other here in Cornwall; Rosamund honors me with her affection; and I am rich, and shall be richer still ere the wedding bells are heard."

"Rich with the fruit of thieving upon the seas, rich with the treasures of scuttled ships and the price of slaves captured in Africa and sold to the plantations, rich as the vampire is glutted—with the blood of dead men!"

"Does Sir John say that?" asked Sir Oliver in a soft, deadly voice.

"I say it."

"I heard you; but I am asking where you learnt that pretty lesson? Is Sir John your preceptor? He is, he is. No need to tell me. I'll deal with him. Meanwhile let me disclose to you the sure and disinterested source of Sir John's rancor. You will see what an upright and honest gentleman is Sir John, who was your father's friend and has been your guardian."

"I'll not listen to what you say of him."

"Nay, but you shall, in return for having made me listen to what he says of me. Sir John desires to obtain a license to build at the mouth of the Fal. He hopes to see a town spring up above the haven there under the shadow of his own manor of Arwenack. He represents himself as nobly disinterested and all concerned for the prosperity of the country, and he neglects to mention that the land is his own and that it is his own prosperity and that of his family which he is concerned to foster. We met in London by a fortunate chance whilst Sir John was about his business at the Court."

"Now it happens that I, too, have interests in Truro and Penryn; but, unlike Sir John, I am honest in the matter, and proclaim it. If any growth should take place about Smithick it follows from its more advantageous situation that Truro and Penryn must suffer, and that suits me as little as the other matter would suit Sir John. I told him so, for I can be blunt, and I told the queen in the form of a counter-petition to Sir John's."

He shrugged.

"The moment was propitious to me. I was one of the seamen who had helped to conquer the unconquerable Armada of King Philip. I was therefore not to be denied, and Sir John was sent home as empty-handed as he went to Court. Dye marvel that he hates me? Knowing him for what he is, dye marvel that he dubs me pirate and worse?"

"'Tis natural enough to misrepresent my doings upon the sea, since it is those doings have afforded me the power to hurt his profit. He has chosen the weapons of calumny for this combat, but those weapons are not mine, as I shall show him this very day. If you do not credit what I say, come with me and be present at the little talk I hope to have with that curmudgeon."

"You forget," said Master Godolphin, "that I, too, have interests in the neighborhood of Smithick, and that you are hurting those."

HAY FEVER DUE SAYS STATE DEPT. OF PUBLIC HEALTH

State Physician Gives Advice to Those Who Are Sufferers

Springfield, Ill. — Approximately 100,000 people in Illinois suffer from hay fever annually during the spring, summer and fall months according to figures based on an estimation made by the American Hay Fever Association. Many of these people do not know that they are subject to hay fever, but rather regard their trouble as "summer colds," "recurrent catarrh," "rhinitis," etc., declared Dr. Isaac D. Rawlings, state health director, in commenting on the situation.

"It is pretty generally known," said the director, "that hay fever is caused by breathing air laden with certain kinds of pollen. It is not so well known that afflictions of the 'summer cold' variety are frequently hay fever in reality and that such ordinary circumstances as a change in the direction of the prevailing winds or removal of the sufferer from a suburban to a city residence frequently result in almost spontaneous relief."

"City folks who never had hay fever may suddenly come down with this disease as a result of an automobile trip into the country where pollen from a certain kind of grass, weed or tree, to which they are susceptible, happen to be abundant. Experts on the subject declare that pollen in sufficient concentration to cause hay fever rarely travels for more than a mile from its source except in windy weather, when the pollen from rag-weeds and other fall hay fever weeds may be carried for five miles or more."

"It is clear, therefore, that one may enjoy almost complete immunity to hay fever while in a down town district of the city, when residence further out or excursions into the country would bring on the illness. To move from the outskirts to a more built up section of town, sometimes affords just as much relief to hay fever patients as long journeys.

When properly selected and administered, vaccines may prove effective in both the prevention and treatment of hay fever. Unfortunately different people are affected by different kinds of pollen so that it is impossible to prepare a given kind of vaccine, as is the case of smallpox, suitable for everyone. Special tests should be made on the individual sufferer in order to successfully treat and prevent hay fever by the vaccination method.

"When seeking relief from hay fever it is very important to secure the advice of a local physician familiar with the various pollens that cause hay fever. Otherwise the one who takes a long trip might readily find oneself in the disagreeable predicament of going from bad to worse, as many hay fever victims have, so far as the presence of the offending pollen is concerned. Indeed it occasionally happens that the dust from coffee grinders and flour mills cause hay fever in some people so that their problem would be simple enough compared with the fellow who must dodge a dozen varieties of grass and weed pollens to which he is susceptible in order to avoid hay fever."

Woman Thinks She Can't Talk Enough

"I had gall stones for 14 years and suffered severely from gas, colic and indigestion. Backache is a Warning

Dixon Folks are Learning How to Heed It.

Are you miserable with an aching back? Do you get up lame and stiff, drag through the day feeling tired, weak and depressed? Then you should help your kidneys. Backache is often the first sign of falling kidneys. Neglected, there's danger of gravel, dropsy of fatal Bright's disease. Don't wait for serious kidney sickness! Use Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys, before it is too late. This Dixon resident tells an experience:

Mrs. M. Y. Cox, 614 Van Buren Ave., says: "Some time ago my back began to bother me. I had a pain in the small of it which bothered me when I stooped or tried to straighten. I also had headaches and frequent dizzy spells. I used one box of Doan's Pills and they entirely removed the trouble."

Price 60c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Pills—the same that Mrs. Cox had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfgs., Buffalo, N. Y.—Adv.

S. S. ASSOCIATION
On Monday evening the executive committee of the S. S. association held a very interesting meeting at the home of M. Messer on East First street. After a prayer by Rev. W. C.
Sell, three objectives were decided upon; first, the ten cents per capita for each Sunday school in the district was approved, this per capita to be paid before the first Sunday in December. Second: the district convention to be held toward the last of September or the first of October with a world famous speaker to address us at that time. This is to be the regular business meeting and the election of officers. Third: to hold rally meetings in the outlying districts. Various other plans were then discussed and the meeting closed with a prayer by Rev. B. H. Cleaver.

The WELL DRESSED MAN
By BEAUNASH
Correct Clothes To Meet The Obligation Of Every Occasion

Fair Isle Sweaters

To the youthful Prince of Wales we are beholden for popularizing the Fair Isle sweater or "jumper," as it is termed in England. Fair Isle is one of the group of islands constituting the world-famous County of Shetland in Scotland which weaves wonderful woollens. The legend runs that shipwrecked sailors from the Spanish Armada taught the natives of Fair Isle how to extract dyes from plants. The sailors, being Spaniards of Moorish descent, brought with them a taste for the Moorish school of decoration—those curious arabesques and convoluted curves which are seen today upon the true sweater hand-made by the inhabitant of romantic Fair Isle.

When this vivid-hued sweater first burst upon the startled vision of Americans, they promptly set it down as a fad which had appeared only to disappear. However, unless signs are all awry the Fair Isle sweater is destined to preserve its vogue among sportsmen, because it is rather a possession than a purchase in the same sense that a genuine Panama hat is something to be cherished and chummed with for life.

A characteristic pattern of the real Fair Isle sweater is reproduced here, showing its bold and brilliant intermingling of colors and designs, each one of which is said to have a hidden meaning known only to the natives. The cross is a symbol frequently to be met. It runs through every theme like a recurring fugue in a musical composition. Yellows, scarlets, purples, blues, greens, the most striking and splashy of colors are yet so cunningly alternated and blended, that a discordant note is never struck in the harpichord of harmony.

Naturally, the Fair Isle sweater has brought many imitations some of which are very creditably executed. The original article is expensive, whereas the reproduction, fetching much less, appeals to the man who must prudently calculate the cost of things. In addition to these sweaters, there are some really excellent ones made in America in the patterns and colorings of the North American Indian—zigzags, tribal insignia and the like. It takes a veritable dread-naught in dress to wear any of these, but, then, today the cry is for color in every accessory of men's clothes.

Burlington Ball Team Back in Good Graces

Rock Island, Ill., July 15.—Burlington, Iowa has its baseball team back again today after a second conference of directors with President M. H. Sexton of the Mississippi Valley League, following the withdrawal from the circuit yesterday, over an umpire dispute which has been the subject of discussion since the Bees played at Ottumwa, July 3.

At the first conference yesterday afternoon the Burlington directors claimed that their players were being fined and removed from too many games and unless they could be assured that the umpires would leave their players alone, Burlington would quit the league.

In reply Sexton stated that such a defiant attitude would not be tolerated and that they had his permission to quit at that moment. As a result the Burlington team played the opening game in Rock Island yesterday as a "league team," and not as the Burlington club.

The conference was a brief one last night. Promises from the Burlington representatives that situations hereafter would be handled without trouble by their organization once more restored peace to the valley circuit.

LEE CO. FARM BUREAU NOTES

OATS SMUT TAKES ITS TOLL

Ninety-six bushels of oats per farm or a triple box wagon load is lost each year on the average if a farmer does not treat oats for smut. In other words 40 acres of oats yielding 40 bushels, but having 5 per cent smut, the average to be found in the untreated fields means about 36 bushels of oats eaten up by smut that just as well have matured good sound grains if treated by the formaldehyde treatment.

This years numerous counts made by Farm Adviser Griffith in various fields in the county proved that if anything there is more smut this year than was the case last year. Any number of fields are showing up 10 or 12 per cent where the oats have not been treated. Fields that were treated a year ago, but untreated this year are showing up more smut than is usual for one year's neglect in treating.

A farmer who is not a member of the Farm Bureau and has not followed instructions for treating oats for smut, last year had 12 per cent smut in his oats. When told of this he said it couldn't be possible as he had the best oats in the threshing run, and had a yield of 45 bushels per acre. Nevertheless, this would have meant at least 50 bushels had he treated the oats and killed all the smut.

Last year many counts in fields of both members of the Farm Bureau and non members made by Advisor, Griffith showed that members' fields had 2.6 per cent smut while non members averaged 5.4 per cent. This meant a saving to members by following the directions put out by the Farm Bureau of about 3 per cent of usual amount of grain per acre or a total difference of $38.80 if all farmers had followed directions for treating to prevent smut, as well as did the members of the Farm Bureau. This is figuring oats at only 30 cents per bushel.

The method of treating oats is so simple and inexpensive that any farmer can prevent this loss very easily and cheaply.

The word tobacco is derived from "tobacco," the tube or pipe through which tobacco was smoked by the natives of Central and South America.

John Ainsley Master Thief
Arthur Somers Roche
Copyright 1924 NEA Service Inc.

TO CATCH A THIEF IF=

BEGIN HERE TODAY

John Ainsley, a man of education and breeding, becomes a master crook—preying upon other thieves. At Monte Carlo he develops a desire to meet the clever thief who stole a pearl necklace from the throat of the Baronne d'Esterville in the crowded halls of the Casino.

At the roulette tables Ainsley watches a young Englishman and his strikingly pretty American bride lose all the money they have. Behind them stands a tall, black-bearded man, urging them on. "Unless the Prince lends money, we have nothing," says the young husband, glancing at the black-bearded one. The wife looks accusingly at the Prince. "You encouraged Jack," she declares.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

"Because I know that his luck must turn," said the Russian. He smiled. "You hesitate to borrow from me? It is nothing. In a little while you will make some successful coup; your husband will repay me; we will order champagne and laugh together at your moment of despair."

Jelly contemptuous, she disdained him. She laid a slimy beautiful hand upon her husband's shoulder. "Come, Jack," she said again.

This time the young man obeyed her. He rose, and they walked off together. But I noticed that the Russian accompanied them. I felt a pang of pity for the young Englishman and his American bride. I could guess it all so easily: a honeymoon trip to Monte Carlo, the fascination of roulette; the unanticipated losses, the plunging to recoup, the sinister friend who encouraged them to wager more than they could afford. It is a story that has always been told, and always will be told, when wealth craves youth and beauty. Sometimes youth and beauty escape, but how frequent are the other times!

But after all, it was none of my business. I should have liked to drop a word of warning in the young man's ear, but if his wife's caution was unheeded by him, of what avail would be the word of a stranger?

So I returned to the game. The little incident had passed unnoticed. They are a sophisticated lot at Monte; and everything, even death itself, is dismissed with a shrug and a smile.

And now the red returned. I lost thrice in succession, shifted my allegiance, and beheld black turn up in defeat. I rose and walked to another table. I arrived in time to see the Baronne d'Esterville being paid off. She had backed seventeen for the maximum in half a dozen ways, and was receiving from the admiring croupiers, always insolently solicitous for tips, nearly forty thousand francs. The spectacle was disgusting. I had just seen a woman of rare beauty suffering because her husband had lost a sixth of what this profiteer's wife had won. My sympathy is with lovelessness and charm. So I went to another table.

Fortune eluded me. I sought her at every table in the Cercle Prive, and then I looked for her in the public rooms outside. But still she escaped me. Glancing at my watch, I found that it was ten o'clock, and so decided to try my luck at the Sporting Club, that other establishment maintained by the Casino authorities, where the fashion and wealth of the world assemble. And if it was wondered at that I had secured entrance to this place, let wonderment cease. One merely mentions the name of a well-known club, anywhere in the world, claims membership therein, and is elected to the Sporting Club. It calls itself exclusive, but no temple of vice—and gambling is a vice—can be too rigorous in its scrutiny of applicants for admission. After all, the ultimate test of fashion, or society, is the possession of money. With enough money one can rattle it with the King of England. With the appearance of money, one can rattle it with the King's cousin at the tables of the Sporting Club.

So I descended in the elevator to the underground passage that leads from the Casino, through the Hotel de Paris, to the Sporting Club, and in another elevator rose to the gambling rooms.

Duchess and demimondaine, marquises and munitionmakers, princesses, entrepreneurs, brewers, millionaires, royalties, actors, authors, chorus girls, and perhaps even such others of my own profession as may be found in any cosmopolitan gathering—they were all in the Sporting Club.

I went first to the cosy little bar, with its inviting tea-tables at which so little tea is drunk. I ordered a glass of milk. I find that the beverage is soothing to the nerves, and nerves need soothing when one gambles, even though for small stakes. While I drank it, I surveyed the little room. And there in the alcove I saw the American girl, her husband, and the big Russian whom he had called "the Prince." They were evidently ending a discussion. For I saw the Russian hand the young man a sheaf of bank-notes, saw the girl's expression of despondency, and noted the grit of triumph on the Prince's face. The jaws of the wolf were near, I felt, to the white throat of the quarry. Then the young man leaped to his feet, and rushed for the roulette-room. The girl would have followed, but the Russian whispered to her. His thick, hairy hand rested on her wrist. She shuddered, but—she stayed.

Well, once again it was no business of mine. I wandered into the Salon de Roulette, and at the end table began backing the first dozen. For half an hour I had varying luck, and then the young Englishman came to my table. His face was haggard. Evidently those successful coups which the Prince had mentioned had not yet been made by him. And within the next ten minutes I saw him lose as many thousand francs, rise from the table, and with a curse, leave the room.

SHORTLY thereafter, finding that I had no cigarettes, and not seeing an attendant at hand, I started for the bar. In the corridor I came upon the Englishman and the Prince. The Russian was speaking. "I am sorry, my friend, but I have no more money with me. Perhaps, too, it is as well that you cease gambling tonight. Luck is not with you."

The youth's face became whiter. "But I must play tonight," he protested.

Now, eavesdropping, save in the line of business, is not a habit of mine. I trust that it is not necessary for me to repeat with frequency that, save where it conflicts absolutely with my profession, I am a gentleman. But I was strangely interested in the drama being unfolded before me. The beauty of the American girl had won my heart. So I stepped back into the roulette room. An Italian was making some sensational winnings, and no one else would leave the room until his spectacular luck changed. I could listen unnoticed.

"But why not tomorrow? The sales de jeux will be open tomorrow," smiled the Russian.

I could not longer see the young man's face, but his tones told me that its pallor had been succeeded by the crimson of shame.

"The hotel, Prince," he faltered. "The bill was presented yesterday. They asked me about it tonight. I dare not return."

"Then perhaps Madame, your wife, who has returned there, will be subjected to annoyance," said the Prince. "Then of course you must win. And I have money in my room. But I cannot go there just now. There is a gentleman awaiting me downstairs. It is a matter that has to do with statecraft. You will understand. You know the troublous condition of Russia. And I shall be engaged nearly all night."

His voice grew uncertain, as though he were choosing his words with difficulty, uncertain of what he was about to say.

"It has to do with the overthrow of Bolshevism, this little meeting of tonight," he went on. "In fact, I may not be back until morning. But even so!" His voice grew suddenly assured. "Here are my keys, monsieur. See, this is the key to my apartment. This other is the key to my trunk—the big trunk that you will find behind the screen in my bedroom. And this tiny key will unlock a steel cash-box that you will find in the top drawer of the trunk. Go there, monsieur, to my room, open my trunk and cash-box, take from the latter what you will, and return here. And if good fortune does not come your way, reserve enough to pay your hotel bill, and capital with which to resume play in this morning."

"You are a friend!" cried the Englishman. "Why not?" laughed the Russian. I heard him slap the young man on the back. "Go by the elevator and the underground passage. My apartment is Three-twenty-two. You will be back here in ten minutes. No, say no more. Thank me when fortune has been good."

I came through the doorway then. It was all I could do to restrain myself from apologizing to the Russian for my base suspicions of him. I saw the young man turn down the corridor toward the elevator. The Russian went down the stairs, and I followed behind him, reclaiming my hat and coat from the vestiaire where I had deposited them on arriving, and descended the outer steps of the Club. I, too, had rooms in the Hotel de Paris, but I wished a breath of fresh air before I turned in.

But to my surprise, I saw mounting the hill toward the hotel, hurrying at a great rate, the figure of the Prince. Yet I had heard him say that he was to meet some one downstairs in the Sporting Club. I was surprised at seeing him now. Also I was surprised to find that the stars had disappeared, and that a cold rain was proving the fact that February is not May, even though it counterfeits the gentler month occasionally here upon the Riviera. So I gave up my plan to obtain fresh air, and started for the hotel. A belated cabman halted me. It was only a few hundred yards, but one can be thoroughly wet by a Riviera rain, in a few feet.

CARROLL PHONE COMPANY TO SUE BOYCOTT LEADER

Unusual Case Against Subscribers Planned by Company There

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Mt. Carroll, Ill. —Willis Stage, Joseph Melendy, Elmer Green and Frank Brown, residents of York township, Carroll county, are defendants in a suit filed in circuit court here by the Carroll County Telephone Company, which charges the four men with conspiracy to injure the business of the plaintiff company. The sum of $10,000 damages is demanded.

It is charged that the four defendants were instrumental in circulating petitions among the subscribers of the telephone company demanding county rights without extra charge authorized by the Illinois utility commission. The company alleges the four men named in the suit were leaders in an attempt to boycott the company and that as a result many subscribers were induced to sign petitions agreeing to remove their telephones if county rights were not granted to them.

As a result of the petition, 25 telephones have been removed from the vicinity of the hamlet of Argo-Pa and similar petitions are being circulated in Thompson. It is reported nearly 175 subscribers have signed the Argo-Pa petition, and that of this number 28 have already have removed their phones.

Telephone company officials declare the suit will be pushed to the limit against the four men.

They also assert that criminal charges will be made against persons who are found agitating the further spread of the alleged boycott.

"The Carroll County Telephone Company is the only one in the state to, far as we know, where county rights are granted at all," said Manager Allen, of the company. "In most other counties," he said, "there is a straight toll charge every time a subscriber wishes service out of the local exchange. Here," said Mr. Allen, "our subscribers are given a choice of paying the toll charge on securing this service over the year at a monthly rate. It rests with the subscriber which service he wants. The state utility commission authorized the rate we are to charge for this county rights as it is called, and it took this charge into account when it fixed our other rates. To renounce the county rights would be equivalent to reducing our rates, and we cannot reduce our rates and continue to give reasonable service."

The subscriber objects to paying any toll whatever for services anywhere within the county, believing they should have the privilege with out charge other than the regular monthly rental for service within the local exchange.

LETTER FROM JAMES CONDON TO SALLY ATHERTON, CONTINUED

But I must confess, Sally dear, that I also had a rather oddish desire to still listen in, and so I kept still.

"Mrs. Atherton is friend wife's dearest friend," said another man in a sarcastic tone of voice.

"Some old story," remarked another sapiently. "A man will break up the friendship of any two women."

"How about a woman coming between two men, old chap?" inquired the youngest member of the party, who hadn't said much.

"Well," remarked the man who had spoken first, "all I've got to say is that Prescott is walking on thin ice with that woman. There is something about her—an intangible something—that will make any man leave home and mother, and Jack Prescott is one of the most susceptible of men."

"Sure—don't you remember his affair with the little Perier girl— I'll bet he's sorry he threw her over now. They say she's drawing down three thousand a week in the movies."

By this time, Sally, I could stand it no longer, and I left my dinner half eaten and got out of the restaurant.

I did not tell all this to you, dear, when I was with you, for I was most unwilling to even let you know that your name was being coupled with Mr. Prescott's. I know that you love your work, and I was sure that your pride would be greatly hurt if you thought for a moment that anyone had the temerity to misunderstand your motives.

Oh, my dear, my dear, don't put yourself in a false position. The world is still censorious of a woman's actions, even if those actions are of the most innocent intent.

I know you're saying, "Jim is talking like a father," and for once I'm glad to be able to do so, as you have always thought I was too young.

Don't be angry at what I've written. I thought I could warn you better of Jack Prescott by telling you what other people said than to give you my opinion of him. I've always felt sorry for his wife, and especially so since I found him glowering at us that night in the restaurant when we were dining together. Why, he acted as though he owned you, Sally.

Dear, I don't want any man to own you, not even myself. You're too splendid in your own beautiful strength and independence, and so I only want to love you—love you better than all the world beside.

I can't do it, Sally. I must keep on loving you. You have made yourself a part of me, and whether I wish or not I shall have to carry you around in my heart as long as I shall live.

JUST JIM.
